

if there are three or more levels associated with that particular factor a multiple comparison test is appropriate to find out where the significant differences lie among the main effect means. If a first order is significant, researcher will often disregard the results related to the main effects of the two factors that are involved in the interaction. Instead they can average the data across the variable that is not involved in the interaction then apply tests of interaction.